Overview

Why are Indonesian investors embracing ESG?

There is a growing incorporation of ESG principles globally, although challenges persist. This was accelerated during the pandemic, with 79% of APAC investors significantly or moderately increasing ESG investments by Q3 2020, according to MSCI research. In Indonesia a leading cause of this shift has been applied pressure from foreign investors.

Should communities be included in ESG initiatives?

Communities should be included from the beginning in developing ESG initiatives, as they bring valuable knowledge and understanding that can make these standards more relevant and impactful. By combining global ESG frameworks with local insights, Indonesia can carve its own path toward sustainable governance that truly fits its unique needs.

Is ESG risk a one-size-fits-all approach?

Key among these, there is no one-size-fits all approach: ESG risk exposure varies by organisation, as well as by market and industry. Within emerging markets in particular, it is paramount to balance environmental, social and governance concerns – adding another layer of complexity.

How can ESG improve value preservation?

Targeted ESG improvement can enable value preservation: early steps comprise the identification of value-linked ESG factors, the review of operations and value chains for exposure to climate change, social unrest and poor corporate governance, and subsequent risk mitigation.

Is ESG strategy a threat to consumer preferences?

Despite incumbent challenges, ESG strategy – from the establishment of good governance to the incorporation of science-based targets – offers opportunities as well as threats. Changes in consumer preferences present the most salient opportunity.

Are green technologies a sustainable solution for Indonesia?

For example: Green technologies offer a competitive and sustainable solution to Indonesia's growing demand for utilities and natural resources, and could help address infrastructure challenges. These technologies will facilitate climate mitigation and adaptation, food security and coastal protection.
