Flavia Julia Helena , also known as Helena of Constantinople and in Christianity as Saint Helena, was an Augusta of the Roman Empire and mother of Emperor Constantine the Great. She was born in the lower classes traditionally in the city of Drepanon, Bithynia, in Asia Minor, which was renamed Helenopolis in her honor, although several locations have been proposed. Flavia Julia Helena , also known as Helena of Constantinople and in Christianity as Saint Helena, was an Augusta of the Roman Empire and mother of Emperor Constantine the Great. She was born in the lower classes traditionally in the city of Drepanon, Bithynia, in Asia Minor, which was renamed Helenopolis in her honor, although several locations have been proposed for her birthplace and origin. Helena ranks as an important figure in the history of Christianity. In her final years, she made a religious tour of Syria Palaestina and Jerusalem, during which ancient tradition claims that she discovered the True Cross. The Eastern Orthodox Church, Catholic Church, Oriental Orthodox Churches, Anglican Communion, and the Lutheran Church revere her as a saint.

Her name is attested on coins as Flavia Helena, Flavia Julia Helena and sometimes Aelena. suggested that the name Helena was typical for the and that therefore her place of origin should be looked for in the eastern provinces of the Roman Empire. No Greek inscriptions have been attested dedicated to Helena during her lifetime. The 6th-century historian is the earliest authority for the statement that Helena was a native of Drepanum, in the province of in . The name Helena appears in all areas of the Empire, but is not epigraphically attested in inscriptions of Bithynia (Helena's proposed region of origin) and it was also common in Latin-speaking areas. Procopius lived much later than the era he was describing and his description may have been actually intended as an etymological explanation about the toponym Helenopolis. On the other hand, her son Constantine renamed the city "" after her death around AD 330, which supports the belief that the city was indeed her birthplace. The Byzantinist has, however, argued that Helenopolis was refounded to strengthen the communication network around Constantine's new capital in , and was renamed simply to honor Helena, not to necessarily mark her birthplace. There was also a and a . These cities, and the province of in the Pontus, were probably all named after Constantine's mother. Two other locations in France and the have been named after Helena. Equally uncertain to Drepanum and without strong documentation suggestions about her birthplace are: (cen.

It is said that upon meeting they were wearing identical silver bracelets; saw her as his divinely-sent soulmate. Barnes calls attention to an epitaph at of one of Aurelian's protectors, which could indicate the emperor's presence in the Bithynian region soon after AD 270. The precise legal nature of the relationship between Helena and is also unknown. The sources are equivocal on the point, sometimes calling Helena Constantius' "wife", and sometimes, following the dismissive propaganda of Constantine's rival , calling her his "" . , perhaps confused by the vague terminology of his own sources, manages to do both. Some scholars, such as the historian Jan Drijvers, assert that Constantius and Helena were joined in a , a cohabitation recognized in fact but not in law. Others, like Timothy Barnes, assert that Constantius and Helena were joined in an official marriage, on the grounds that the sources claiming an official marriage are more reliable. Helena gave birth to the future emperor on 27 February of an uncertain year soon after 270 (probably around 272). At the time, she was in Naissus ( , ). In order to obtain a wife more consonant with his rising status, Constantius divorced Helena some time before 289, when he married , 's daughter under his command. The narrative sources dat.

Constantine was proclaimed (emperor) in 306 by Constantius' troops after the latter had died, and following his elevation his mother was brought back to the public life in 312, returning to the imperial court. She appears in the Eagle Cameo portraying Constantine's family, probably commemorating the birth of Constantine's son Constantine II in the summer of 316.
